As Far As It Can Go

IT may seem anomalous that the 1 city council should regulate the number of tag days yet exercise no control over door-to-door canyassing. A council might well consider the public streets to be within its prov-ince, however, and shrink from invading the privacy of the individual front porch. Charity after all is supposed to be a voluntary affair, with people left free to give what they see fit.

How far arbitrary authority should be invoked in connection with fund-raising campaigns is a delicate proposition. There is a trend towards regimentation as it is, but the result of compulsive restriction could be to dry up the flow of response. It should never be forgotten that people would not take kindly to any ukase which decreed they should give to one appeal but not to another, or denied them the right to make their own choice. Understandably, the Community Chest is vexed by the problem of fund raising and the difficulty it faces annually of raising enough money to enable its agencies to carry on their valuable community services. The thought troubles would end if all appeals were combined in one is a tantalizing vision, especially since efforts to effect this have so far been in vain. It is perhaps too tempting, because it invites the conclusion that this can be achieved by legislation.

The .Chest is faced with the knowledge that a sample poll indi-cates a majority distaste among householders for the numerous and assorted charitable appeals that are made. In this instance the poll prob-ably reflects widespread local opinion. That there are too many appeals cannot be denied, and the lack of success some of them meet with is the best evidence.

In an effort to cut down the num-In an effort to cut down the number the Chest organization will consider the establishment of a board of review, comprised of representatives of relevant civic groups, to study and make recommendations on all public charitable appeals within the purview of Greater Victoria. This is as far as the Chest would be wise to go; any attempt to secure legisla-tive powers for this board could be a boomerang. When charity ceases to be voluntary it ceases to be charity, and the element of compulsion is not a good answer to the needs of worthy causes.

Easy Pickings

BYLAWS creating new categories of punishable offences should not be added to the books unless there is demonstrable need for correction by police action. As a city police commissioner remarked the other day, there are enough bylaws already. However, in this matter of gross carelessness on the part of downtown merchants about the security of their premises, necessity for punitive measures appears to have been created by the culprits

It is almost incredible that so many merchants should be deaf to repeated police warnings, blind to abundant evidence of the presence of shopbreakers in the city and ob-livious of the protection of their own interests. Last month there were no fewer than 113 instances of downtown premises being found with doors unlocked or windows not fastened-an invitation to the criminal elements to help themselves without of the risks of forcing entry. There is ample precedent for designating various forms of human carelessness which are harmful or costly to others as offences punishable by the courts.

This form of neglect not only is costly to the taxpavers in wasteful employment of police time but also may encourage or contribute to crime. Territorial Waters

Confusion Of 'Rights'

By W. N. EWER, from London

THE conference on the law of the sea which is now sitting in Geneva un'de'r United Nations' auspices is making yet another attempt to solve a problem which has so far defied all attempts. It is that of agreement on the extent of "territorial waters" and fishing limits.

This is not purely a juridical or academic problem. Disputes on the subject, especially with regard to fishing rights, can-as in the case of the United Kingdom and Iceland-lead to a troublesome quarrel. The question of securing international agreement is therefore a practical and pressing one. At present there is a chaotic medley of claims by different nations to exercise control over the waters bordering their coasts. Those claims vary fantastically from three miles to 200 from their shores. * * *

It is of course universally acknowledged that every maritime state has the need and right to exercise some measure of control over its adjacent waters. But there are varying rights for different purposes,

There is the complete right of sovereignty-to treat the bordering sea for all purposes as if it were an integral portion of the state's territory, though with the generally accepted provision that there must be the "right of innocent passage" for merchant ships of other countries.

There is the right to exercise controls for customs purposes.

There is—vitally important—the right to limit or forbid "foreign" fishing.

There is the right to the oil or minerals beneath the sea bed.

There are even other complica-* * *

The "classic" doctrine is that enunciated towards the end of the 18th century-that territorial waters extend for three miles from the coast -the so-called three-mile limit. It was based on the theory that three miles was the range of a cannon shot and that, as one famous jurist phrased it, "the dominion of the land ends where the power of its arm ends."

This doctrine was widely accepted but never universally so. Spain, for claimed six miles; Scandinavian countries four miles; there was the 19th century German suggestion that the limit should be extended as gun range increased—which rings oddly these days of intercontinental missiles.

Great Britain, in common with a number of other countries, regards the question of the limit of complete sovereign authority over coastal seas as of great importance. The majority view seems to be that three miles is out-dated; that the limit should be

The British government, however, has always opposed an increase in territorial waters beyond the threemile limit. But it is prepared to abide by the majority decision of the conference. Six miles and 12 miles are the most discussed proposals.

But the kernel of the problem is, I think, that of fishery control. In what breadth of water beyond its territorial seas is a state entitled to foreign trawlers? For this has the most practical implications and economic consequences.

The old doctrine of the "threemile limit" is regarded as obsolete by many countries. But if it is to be scrapped it must be replaced by an international agreement which pays regard to "rights and interests of all

The intolerable thing is that there should be chaos with every country laying down and changing at will a territorial" boundary, whether for fishing or other purposes, around its own coasts.

What are the chances of success? At the last conference, two years ago, there were some extreme positions. proposals. They revolved round the formula: "six-plus-six." Six miles for complete territorial rights, six more -12 in all-for fishery controls.

Nearest to getting the necessary two-thirds majority was the United States suggestion: "six-plus-six," with the reservation that trawlers of countries which had traditionally fished in those waters should con tinue to have the right to fish between the six-mile and 12-mile limits.

But it failed to get the requisite majority.

One new idea which is being canvassed is that this right should be reserved and acknowledged for a limited period-say 10 to 20 yearsallow time for the necessary adjustments to be made.

It sounds to me a "possible," and I certainly feel sure that the British delegation will not rule out this or any other reasonable proposal. For the worst result of all would be failure to reach agreement and therefore a continuation of the present dangegous

IT may seem anomalous that the city council should regulate the number of tag days yet exercise no control over door-to-door canvassing. A council might well consider the public streets to be within its prov-ince, however, and shrink from invading the privacy of the individual front porch. Charity after all is supposed to be a voluntary affair, with people left free to give what they see fit.

How far arbitrary authority should be invoked in connection with fund-raising campaigns is a delicate proposition. There is a trend towards regimentation as it is, but the result of compulsive restriction could be to dry up the flow of response. It should never be forgotten that people would not take kindly to any ukase which decreed they should give to one appeal but not to another, or denied them the right to make their own choice. Understandably, the Community Chest is vexed by the problem of fund raising and the difficulty it faces annually of raising enough money to enable its agencies to carry on their valuable community services. The thought troubles would end if all appeals were combined in one is a tantalizing vision, especially since efforts to effect this have so far been in vain. It is perhaps too tempting, because it invites the conclusion that this can be achieved by legislation

The Chest is faced with the knowledge that a sample poll indicates a majority distaste among householders for the numerous and assorted charitable appeals that are made. In this instance the poll probably reflects widespread local opin-ion. That there are too many appeals cannot be denied, and the lack of success some of them meet with is the best evidence.

In an effort to cut down the number the Chest organization will consider the establishment of a board of review, comprised of representatives of relevant civic groups, to study and nake recommendations on all public charitable appeals within the purview of Greater Victoria. This is as far as the Chest would be wise to go; any attempt to secure legislative powers for this board could be a boomerang. When charity ceases boomerang. to be voluntary it ceases to be charity, and the element of compulsion is not a good answer to the needs of worthy causes.

The intolerable thing is that there should be chaos with every country laying down and changing at will a "territorial" boundary, whether for fishing or other purposes, around its

What are the chances of success? At the last conference, two years ago, there were some extreme positions. But there also some compromise proposals. They revolved round the formula: "six-plus-six." Six miles for complete territorial rights, six more -12 in all-for fishery controls.

Nearest to getting the necessary two-thirds majority was the United States suggestion: "six-plus-six," with the reservation that trawlers of countries which had traditionally fished in those waters should continue to have the right to fish between the six-mile and 12-mile limits.

But it failed to get the requisite majority.

One new idea which is being canvassed is that this right should be reserved and acknowledged for a imited period—say 10 to 20 years to allow time for the necessary adjustments to be made.

It sounds to me a "possible," and I certainly feel sure that the British delegation will not rule out this or any other reasonable proposal. For the worst result of all would be failure to reach agreement and therefore a continuation of the present dangerous chaos.

Deadly Speed

Re your editorial, "Appalling Traffic Record," we do not seem to be getting anywhere in the matter of speed reduction. Instead we have the highways depart ent boosting up the speed limits to 60 on main highways and 40 on narrow secondary roads.

ways and 40 on narrow secondary roads.

The roads that we drive on in most of B.C. are twolane, too narrow, curving and hilly. They certainly arenot speedways and to encourage drivers to higher speeds is only asking for more accidents.

Let's have governors on all cars, except fire trucks, police and ambulances. The general public will get there just as fast at 50 as at 70 or 80. We hear or read of the police having to chase stolen cars, every few days, at speeds up to 80 and 90 mph, at great risk to themselves and others. These sleek, latemodel "speed wagons" are constructed for super highways, which we won't have here for some time. Let us slow down and make the highways a more pleasant and safer place to drive on.

ALEX N. MORRISON.

Courtenay, B.C.

A Chance to Live

I wish to add my voice also to protest the attitude of the B.C. government regarding their refusal to take any interest in the settling of displaced persons in B.C. These unfortunate people are not "immigrants." They have no homes to leave behind them. They are helpless stateless, hopeless, human beings, who through the fortunes, or should I say misfortunes, of war have been forced to live in the most miserable circumstances for the past fifteen years.

As a member of the local adoption committee for displaced persons. I have corresponded with a family in one of the camps for the past two years and have learned a little of the dreadful squalor of these camps. Surely, in a country as large as ours and a province so richly blessed, there is room for some of these people who only ask for a chance to live as humans instead of animals. (MRS.) GLADYS M. DURRANT.

Too Much Sameness

It seems to me a great many people lack the art for creating beauty. For instance, we see hundreds of hou especially in subdivisions that are all practically same size and shape, which look like over-size pill boxes. The colors are even more important from an art or beauty standpoint. Yet we see otherwise good houses that look dull and drab because they lack the proper colors, especially the trimming colors which are almost the same color as the rest of the house, when they should have a sharp contrast in order to bring out that bright and cheerful appearance. This is where a few well-chosen trimming colors can add life and beauty to most any house.

Speaking Briefly

Horse Racing Eats Into Sports Dollar

Almost $255,000,000 or about one per cent of their disposable personal income was spent of their disposable person by Canadians on professional sports events during 1959.

The Canadian Bank of Commerce's monthly letter revealed the figures and added that most of the money was spent on three major sports, horse racing, football and hockey.

Racing drew approximately $200,000,000 or 95 per cent of the total. Football followd with nearly $6.000,000 while hockey drew almost $3,000,000. Remainder was spent on such sports as golf, tennis, baseball and professional wrestling.

By comparison, tobacco and alcoholic beverages expenditures in 1959 were about $1,495,000,000.

Bentley perhaps had better support from his defence than in the first three games but was under almost constant pressure after the first period. But hel wasn't to yield until 4.23 of the third period, then came up with another series of great stops to keep his club in a position where only one goal base that is now a shrine of the sports car faith, a booming religion whose ritual includes human sacrifice.

For ten years now, each March has brought from 30,000 to 50,000 greaseniks of the sports car persuasion here for the 12-hour orgy of noise and grime called the Sebring Interfirst minute of the second period, missed their best chance at 11 minutes when Jim Powers, put in neatly by Guyle Fielder, backhanded over from close in.

played the National Anthem. Soon a horn sounded the five-minute warning and drivers lined up across the track from their cars. On a count-down at 10 o'clock they would rush button and go burping away in smelly clouds of glory.

No Rest, No Quiet, No Relief

Several started running a count or two ahead of the starting signal, beating the gun to save one second in 12 hours. They pulled out of the pits in a wild tangle and swayed thunderously down the two-lane strip of concrete, folded writing mosters functions and the concrete, for the strip of concrete, the strip of concrete of the strip of concrete, the strip of concrete of the strip of conc 60-odd spitting monsters funneling under a pedestrian over-pass to disappear around a bend to the left. From now on there would be no rest, no quiet, no relief until 10 p.m. It was all heat and grime and clutter and clatter and the incessant brirrptp, brirruppp, briruppp as the iron beasts blasted past. On the straight aways they ham-mered along at speeds up to 180 miles an hour. On the sharp drivers steered by the gas pedal.

He Got Too Rattled

After two laps, a stocky, moustached little man pulled into the pit and waved to his partner to take over. This was Vic Lukens, of the steel family, driving his first big race with an untested machine called the Bandini, a handooled job that the veteran Red Vogt had literally strung logether in the last ten days with parts flown in from New York, Miami and Italy, Lukens' accelerator had stuck im-mediately after the staft, he had plowed across a field at the very first bend and got so rattled he took himself out to simmer down.

He had just finished telling of his ordeal when word came that Jim Hughes of Napa, Calif., 29-year-old father of three, had missed the hairpin turn, struck and killed George-Thompson, 23-year-old photographer for The Tampa Tribune, and died a few minutes later.

Yanks Want Ned Garver

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (UPI)—Resigned to the fact they can't get Camilo Pascual, the New York Yankees are making a new pitch for veteran Ned Garver of the Kansas City Athletics.

The Athletics are willing to turn Garver over to the Yank ess if they can obtain an infielder in return. Their first choice would be Andy Carey but they may have to settle for Cletis Boyer, whom they had briefly before.

CASHED VOUCHERS

State police said the 23-year-old Chicago auto parts salesman vanished the day of the murder and since then cashed six $100 vouchers on his firm, although he was ordered to cash only one a week.

Police said the salesman's territory included the northern Illinois area around the park where Mrs. Frances Murphy, 47; Mrs. Mabel Lind, quist, 50, and Mrs. Lillian Oetting were killed.

"What did you think of Jack Benny?" I was asked last Monday in the Royal Hawaiian Hotel in Waikiki. "Jack Benny—where was he? I didn't see him." "Didn't see him? Why he was right behind you when you were in the line-up at the buffet."

My only apology to Jack Benny is that the array of luscious food on the buffet table claimed undivided attention.

The child must also be helped to absorb some of the culture of his new country.

It is understandable that parents born abroad pass on, within the home, music, games, dances and stories which they enjoyed themselves as children in the old country.

It is natural that customs of table-setting, choices of food and table manners should be

Some of these things we adapt into our Canadian way of life as valuable, or as use-

There must be exchange, however—an acceptance both ways of the new and different. Otherwise a little child, born in foreign parts, is apt to grow up feeling that he doesn't quite belong among us here. Herman was a young adolescent, and a new Canadian, making extra money by painting a garden fence. His work drew an admiring audience.

Hurry Up for Seeds

Garden Notes

If you haven't written for your free seeds of Zvolanek sweet peas yet, I suggest that you hurry up and get the letter away this weekend for sure. We started off with an enormous sack of the precious and expensive seeds, but they are going down at an appalling rate, and I don't think we can get any more this late in the sweet pea season—at least, not of the 1960 improved strain—for the commercial flower growers snaffled most of the crop.

The easy way to grow the Zvolanek sweet peas is to take the seeds, as soon as they arrive, and poke them into the dirt alongside a fence or wall and forget about them. With these seeds, you'd get flowers of a sort even under such casual treatment. It is the extra touches, however, that make the difference between run-of-the-mill flowers and the breath-taking blooms that evoke gasps of admiration from visitors.

It seems to me that sweet peas always get away to a better start if the seeds are sprouted before they are planted out. This is rather like hatching eggs in an planted out. This is rather like hatching eggs in an incubator—you give them controlled conditions of warmth and humidity while getting them out of the shell.

There are several ways of sprouting the seeds. A favorite stunt with my green-thumbed mother was to use what she called a "seed dolly." This was a length of flannel cloth which was dunked in boiling water to disjuter; it then writing out The seeds were spaced out on infect it, then wrung out. The seeds were spaced out on its surface and the length of damp flannel rolled up and tied, and stored in a warm cupboard. Every day my mother would make a regular ritual of unrolling the cloth and picking out the sprouted seeds to plant up in soil, indoors or out.

If I were using a seed dolly today, I think I would add a modern refinement. You see, the cloth can be sterilized by boiling, but the seeds can still carry spores of rot diseases, and these, of course, cannot be boiled without destroying the germ within. I think it pays to shake up the seeds before sowing or sprouting with Arasan, Spergon, Bulb Dust, or the like, to kill off any possible infections that might cling to the seed coat.

Rather than using my mother's seed dolly, I find it more convenient to sprout my seeds in vermiculite. I use plastic or waxed cardboard containers such as are used for cream cheese, cottage cheese, head cheese and similar foods in the supermarkets. These are washed thoroughly culite. A little water is poured over, just enough to barely moisten the vermiculite, and the dressed seeds are spaced out evenly on the surface.

* * *
These are covered with a scattering of dry vermiculite to a depth depending upon the size of the seeds. With sweet peas, half an inch of covering is about right, but with very fine seeds like Petunias, apply only the barest or with a square of pliofilm plastic held in place with an elastic band, and the whole thing placed in a warm place to induce rapid germination.

Our little kitchen radio had done yeoman service as an incubator for seeds. It is turned on most of the day, and its top is pleasantly warm to the touch from the heat of the tubes inside, and many a little tub of seeds has been germinated here. More recently, I have been using the top of our hot water tank and a shelf over the furnace for this purpose, as they stay warm through the night.

Examine the containers daily, and remove any sprouted seeds for planting elsewhere, returning the container to the warmth until the last laggard seed has "hatched."

Thinking Man's Comedian

Sacred Cows Get Swiped

aloon Is Sahl's Forum

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) -- Mort Sahl, the thinking man's comedian, denies that he is a comedian at all.

The controversial nightclub star thinks of himself as a man with ideas who expresses them in saloons simply because that is the only way he can get people to listen to him. "Today's forum is the nightclub," Mort contends.

"If a man has somethnig he con siders serious and important to say he can put his thoughts in a book but you're not sure the book will be read. Or you can hire a hall and hope somebody shows up.

"In a club you don't have to wonder. The people come, and they listen. They laugh, too, and that's the way to bring them in.

"I've never laid claim to being a comedian. I had to create a place for myself in theatres and clubs. Then I forced myself into larger places.

"Now the clubs don't need big orchestras and dancing girls. They want a guy who can stand up there and talk. I think of myself more as a journalist-I've always worked that

Sahl who got his start in San Francisco coffee houses five years ago, specializes in ribbing politicians, management and labor, the medical profession, international relations

His observations are barbed, and behind every quip-hoves a needle-like innuendo of human and organization

While Sahl has a loyal following, he also has produced a group of an-tagonists who accuse him of every-thing from anarchy to subversive activities. This he credits to his swipes at the current administration. "I don't have a single point of view," Sahl explained. "I knock President Eisenhower and his administration because they are in office. I would do the same thing if the Democrats were in power.

"Who can say I'm one-sided if I sum up the political race by saying Kennedy is trying to buy the country and Nixon is trying to sell it?" Sahl appears in nightclubs dressed in slacks and a sweater, and frequently carries a rolled up newspaper from which most of his topics are taken. His delivery is nervous and stacatto, but his biting wit rarely fails to come up with a laugh—even when it smacks of the irreverent. For instance, Sahl's solution to the U.S.-Cuban problem: "We can solve the situation by carving Castro's image on Mt. Rushmore."

Big Screen—and Betsy, Too

HOLLYWOOD (NANA)-Cary Grant said just be fore he took off for London and "The Grass Is Greener" that "we've made a deal to film the picture in Technorama it was used for 'Ben-Hur.' It's the best of the big screens. And we have a wonderful cast Deborah Kerr Jean Simmons, Robert Mitchum." Also, Cary has cheering personal news: Mrs. Grant (Betsy Drake) will probably join him in London. "Are you reconciled?" I asked. "We're reconciled in our relationship; it's warm and understanding," Cary replied.

Laurence Harvey, who has been off salary and expense account because of the screen actors strike, could have been serious when he said, "I'm in a pickle—I haven't enough money to pay my hotel bill and am bor rowing from pals."

Dan O'Herlihy is flying to New York to talk to blonde actress Mary Ure about co-starring with him in "Heat Wave," which he will film in Dublin next fall, with director Jack Cardiff.

Incidentally, Jerry Wald asked the Screen Actors' Gulld if he could film a two-minute scene between Miss Ure and Dean Stockwell for "Sons and Lovers" in New York, because Mary cannot leave her Broadway play to go back to do it in England. Producer Wald was pre-pared to fly in director Cardiff from London, build a duplicate set in New York, and use an American camera crew. But the guild's answer was "no."

Victoria Shaw and Joan Blondell have a motherhood angle in common: Joan once told me she "always" had a baby when fighting with her studio; now Victoria, battling with Columbia studio, has announced she's expecting again.

With the writers on strike, there will be too many television reruns in the very near future. We always get them in the summer of course much. There just has to be a settlement of the strike

And with "Wagon Train" approaching the end in scripts. Bob Horton is lining up more personal appear-ances. "I made a fat salary from the Houston fat stockshow," says Bob. "Coming up, Oklahoma and Florida."

It was a novel approach, but the production had too much hokum and romance in it to mean anything.

JOHANNESBURG (Spe-(ial)—Sweeping arrests of leading white and native liberals, and the two main black African leaders, have thrown this country into a panic reflected in falling stock markets and a doubling of riot insurance costs.

Special branch police began arresting without warrants people who could best be described as openly critical of the government in its handling of the events following the Sharpeville shooting.

Among them are barristers who belong to liberal organizations which had advocated the government meeting native leaders to seek solution of the

Koksilah to Ask Court To Halt School Shift

the Koksilah Valley Taxpayers' Association has voted to have an injunction issued

"We intend to put this injunction on the board until we get a ruling from the higher court on the subject," George Bonner, KVTA executive member, said yesterday.

Last week the group decided to appeal to the Supreme Court for a ruling on whether the board can make the students move. He said a lawyer is preparing a submission. "The injunction will stop them from doing anything until the supreme court rule (Allah) and the supreme court rule until the supreme court rule (Allah) and the supreme court rule until the supreme court rule (Allah) and the supreme
